A Deck May Make the Difference

By designing your deck with accents, lights and unique accessories, you can transform your backyard into an outdoor retreat. Whether you're catching up with friends over dinner or are curled up with a book on a sunny afternoon, a deck is the perfect place to be.

With spring in the air, the exterior of a home becomes even more important when putting your house on the market. Buyers will be spending more time outside looking at your property and envisioning what their summer barbeques and family playtime will look like.

The addition of any amount of usable real estate to a property increases value. Customized decks and personalized outdoor living areas are a hot trend in home upgrades.

A great-looking deck may entice more people to come see your home. Building or updating an existing deck isn't simply a great investment, it also provides opportunities to personalize your backyard and customize to your taste. With many families staying home this summer to save money, why not create the perfect location for entertaining?

Deck experts agree that multi-level decks are the most popular now. These are a series of decks connected by stairways or walkways, which are aesthetically pleasing and can be used for different purposes. One level can be used to catch the sun, one level can be positioned for shade and another can be set close to the house for entertaining and barbequing.

Wood decks have always been the most popular, but caring for them is tough. They will rot over time, are subject to insect infestation and require a great deal of maintenance to keep the wood from fading. Accordingly, people are embracing composite materials for their decks, which initially cost significantly more but will last longer with less maintenance.

For those homes that already have a deck, it's important that it's still in good shape and adds to the attractiveness of a property. You can change your deck's appearance with interesting balusters to match other decorative accents on your house or in your yard. They can add unique touches to make the deck a personal haven. Meanwhile, railings are a great way to pull in color and detail that complements the house.
